

Pivotal Insight Announces Award of a Risk Assessment Contract for the EPA Office of Acquisition Management

Arlington, VA – February 18, 2009 – Pivotal Insight, LLC, a government best practices consulting and research firm, announces an award by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Office of Acquisition Management (OAM) to assess risk related to the deployment of a new acquisition management system and related infrastructure.

OAM is requesting the support of Pivotal, and its subcontractor the Savan Group, to perform a formal risk assessment of the EPA Acquisition System (EAS) and the General Support System (GSS). Risk assessments by independent, external third parties are required for major applications and general support systems owned and/or operated by, or on behalf of, Federal agencies at least every three years or when a major change occurs.

EAS requires a risk assessment as part of the pre-deployment activity leading to a Certification and Authorization to Operate (C&A). In addition, the servers which support this system are being reconfigured as part of a GSS change. “Pivotal is able to assist EPA again by using its deep experience in risk assessment to ultimately help the government achieve business value from its IT investments,” according Rob Cimperman, Vice President of Pivotal Insight.

About the EPA Office of Acquisition Management (OAM)

The Office of Acquisition Management (OAM) is responsible for all contracting and related activities to fulfill the Agency's mission to protect and safeguard the environment through its business relationships. As the business organization of the Agency, OAM manages and supports the Procurement and Contracts Management Program's Policies, Procedures, Operations, Contract Planning, Awards, Administration, and Closeouts.
